Train. Compete. Repeat.

The world's first Competitive Fitness Club
— a permanent home for the team-race format that turned everyday athletes into a movement.

CONCEPT BRIEF

PREPARED FOR ALSEKAL AVENUE · AL QUOZ, DUBAI

EST. 2026

REDLN.

EST. 2026

A permanent home for competitive fitness.

Group fitness proved there is enormous, unmet demand for training that feels like sport — teams, seasons, a clock that matters and a crowd that cares. REDLN gives that energy a permanent address: part gym, part arena, part clubhouse. Members don't just work out. They join a team, train for a season, and race under the lights.

01

The Club

A membership, not a drop-in. Members belong to a team and train year-round in a purpose-built strength-and-conditioning space designed around the race format — coached, programmed, and built for people who want a goal, not just a gym.

02

The Format

Structured, repeatable team races — the same discipline that has become a global movement. Programmed in seasons, ranked on a live leaderboard. You don't quit mid-season; you climb it. Race solo or as a team.

03

Race Day

The peak of the season runs as a live event on the arena floor — a DJ, lights, haze, a spectator zone and a leaderboard that updates the instant a time posts. It looks and feels like a sport, because it is one.

04

The Community

The leaderboard, the team, the belonging. Members wear the badge outside the venue and bring the next member in. It gives people a reason to return and a story to tell — the engine of a brand, not just a business.

Built like a venue, run like a sport.

REDLN is designed to be felt the moment you walk in — raw, industrial and cinematic, closer to a concert floor than a fitness studio. That experience is exactly why the right building matters.

- 1 Arrive
An industrial warehouse transformed — exposed structure, moody light, a single bold red line running through it. You feel you've entered somewhere, not signed into a gym.
- 2 Train
Coached, seasonal programming on a purpose-built floor. Members prepare together, week after week, for a race that's on the calendar.
- 3 Race
Parallel lanes framed by truss towers rigged with speakers and moving lights. A host on the mic, a live leaderboard, a spectator floor. The room turns into an event.
- 4 Belong
Recovery, F&B and a social corner keep members in the building — and bring the community back between race days.

WHAT THE SPACE NEEDS
Building type	Industrial / warehouse character
Ceiling height	High clear height for lighting & truss rigging
Structure	Open, column-light clear span
Footprint	A single large hall for lanes, training & spectators
Power	Capacity for AV, lighting & production
Access	Load-in for events; visitor parking nearby
Frontage	Presence for branding & athlete entry

Exact sizing is flexible — we'd shape the fit-out to the unit. The priorities are volume (height), openness (clear span) and character.

The right building, the right crowd.

The architecture already tells our story

Converted warehouses, raw concrete and volume are the exact canvas REDLN is designed for. We'd amplify the space, not fight it — no need to fake industrial character that's already there.

A community that matches ours

Alserkal draws a design-led, active, socially engaged audience — precisely the members who pay for a premium, experiential concept and share it.

A destination, not a footfall play

REDLN is a place people come to. Alserkal's identity as a cultural destination fits a brand built on events, seasons and reasons to gather.

A tenant that adds to the mix

Sport, culture and community under one roof — a new kind of anchor that complements the galleries, studios and F&B already on the Avenue.

THE ASK

We'd love to explore your available units.

- Which units are currently available, and their sizes & ceiling heights?
- Indicative rent and available lease terms.
- An opportunity to view the space and discuss fit-out.
